

Navient and eQuest Sign Agreement to Provide Users Global Job-Posting Functionality

BOSTON, MA and SAN RAMON, CA (March 1, 2006) – Navient Corporation, a provider of unique on-line software applications containing toolkits designed for use by both line managers and HR staff, today announced it has reached a long term agreement with eQuest, the Internet’s leading job-posting distribution service. The agreement will give Navient customers a single-point of access through its Human Capital Management Solution that will enable job-posting deliveries to hundreds of job boards throughout the world.

Navient has taken first generation ATS technology to the next level and integrated scientific selection research methodology into its software solutions. Its end-to-end hiring management solution provides organizations with on-line application forms, candidate pre-screening, selection assessments, and structured interview support

“Our customers understand the significance of candidate sourcing,” said Bob Sharron, Ph.D. founder of Navient. “Our relationship with eQuest greatly improves the ability to locate candidates in specific market sectors, locations, and skill levels through a simple one-page interface connecting our users to the world.”

“By leveraging the power of eQuest and seamlessly integrating our products and services into the Navient platform brings job posting productivity software to life,” said John Malone, eQuest’s President and CEO. “Our existing features offer Navient customers a “window to the world” to effectively source and hire candidates across a broad stream of available job posting ports of call.”
